Fall Protection Training:

3 hour course will address fall hazards that occur during each phase of residential construction and will offer alternatives for each potential hazard. Certificates and cards will be provided to individuals completing the course.

Electrical and Power Tool Hazards Training:

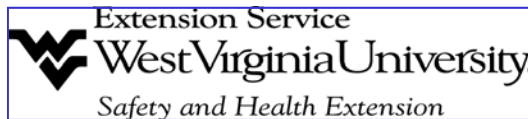

This course will make workers aware of the more common hazards associated with hand and power tool use as well as the electrical hazards that are most often associated with residential construction activities. In addition to becoming aware of such hazards, methods to prevent the development of such dangers will be covered. Best management practices and OSHA requirements related to the subjects will also be discussed.

West Virginia University Safety and Health Extension has developed training material for residential construction workers and supervisors pertaining to fall protection and awareness, through the OSHA Susan Harwood grant. The HBA is partnering with WVU-Safety and Health extension to provide FREE instruction. Fees will be paid directly to the HBA to cover additional costs including hospitality, facilities, equipment, marketing and staffing.
